An artistic reflection of oriental coloring in Byron's "Bride of Abydos" poem Summary

The poem "Bride of Abydos" by Lord Byron is a dramatic poem that tells the story of a young woman, Leila, who is kidnapped and sold into slavery. The poem is set in the East, and it is characterized by its oriental coloring. The poem is a reflection of the author's artistic imagination and his interest in the East.

The poem is divided into three parts. In the first part, Leila is introduced as a young woman who is beautiful and virtuous. She is kidnapped by a band of pirates and sold into slavery. In the second part, Leila is shown in the hands of her captors, who are cruel and brutal. She is forced to work in a harem and to serve the passions of the sultan. In the third part, Leila is rescued by a young man, Selim, who is her true love. They are reunited and live happily ever after. The poem is a reflection of the author's artistic imagination and his interest in the East.
